

Our Luise

No language - no connection?

SINA PRIESSEN 21.05.2020

Learning languages- an important topic that is discussed again and again. Some may think it is unnecessary, some are sure that there is no way to do without it. Different opinions exist all around the world. Learning new languages can be an essential skill for your future you could acquire during the Corona-lockdown.

Connections through language all over the world

Imagine a world without the knowledge of different languages.

That would be a serious disaster. Language means connection. English for example, is becoming the world language and is already the language of the internet. About 1.4 billion people worldwide speak English as their mother or second language. If you are able to speak English you can build connections with people of different countries, make friends or trade with goods.

You like traveling? According to the website of Kaplan International Colleges, 2012, 97% of surveyed people confirmed that knowing another language makes travelling to other countries easier. Knowing the country's native language helps you to find your way in a foreign country. If you want to imbibe a culture and be able to participate in it you have to control to some degree the language that the people speak there.

Learning languages is a vital opportunity to broaden your horizon and gain experience. Moreover, it is an essential skill for your future and your personal success in the job market.

Multilingual employees are more in demand and can expect a salary uplift of up to 20% in certain jobs.

Learning languages is very important for old and young and did you know that dementia is less likely to set in if you speak two languages? Consequently bilingualism is, according to John McWhorter also healthy and usually makes you a better multitasker.

For Bilinguals it is easier to learn a third language than learning another language is for monolinguals. That proves that learning languages also increases your brain power, pretty cool isn't it?

Learning languages is fun and never been easier than now. Information you had to search up in the library earlier, you can now easily find in the internet.

All in all learning languages is an opportunity to improve your life quality.

It is a chance you should take, especially now when you have nothing better to do.